Career Paths

Starting salaries for MIS graduates are typically above average for business graduates along with a placement rate well above 95%. Students in MIS have countless options when thinking about internships and full-time employment. Career paths for MIS students include consulting, analytics, systems analysts, and data analysts. National and global companies visit the Smeal College annually seeking MIS graduates providing them opportunities to gain core competencies that are crucial for career success.

In addition to job-placement services available at the college and University level, the MIS program partners with Smeal's Center for Supply Chain Research (CSCR) in hosting annual fall and spring career fairs attended by more than 100 companies.
