Student Aid and Scholarships Policy

As a public university, Penn State receives limited support from the state.

Undergraduate enrollment across all Penn State campuses exceeds 90,000 a year. An outstanding academic experience for our students comes at a cost, and the University recognizes that Penn State may not be affordable to all who wish to enroll.

While Penn State continues to build its scholarship endowment, available funds do not yet reach all deserving students. Student aid, including education loans, can help defray some costs, but students and parents have the primary responsibility of paying educational expenses. Students and their families are encouraged to devise a financial plan for this important investment and to determine the level of education loan debt that both student and families are willing to incur.
